

Tips for communicating and interacting with students

It's important to have effective communication and interaction with students because it could improve the learning experience and create a positive inspiring environment.

1. Be an active listener and focus on the students' needs
 - An effective communication starts with actively listening to your students. It is important that you listen to their students and understand their thoughts and ideas. Students also will feel heard and this help build a positive relationship with students.
2. Create a Supportive Environment
 - A supportive environment will make students feel their needs are being met and they can get help in the class. This includes showing students that you are approachable if they need additional support.
3. Keep the communication clear and concise
 - Give students clear learning objectives and grading criteria, concise answers to students' questions, and be supportive when students need help.
4. Establish a welcoming tone
 - The timing and format of communications are important, and establishing a helpful and inviting tone during the communication can make students more comfortable sharing their questions and concerns.
